Section 228(2) and Section 242 have been pulled down and scrapped. The risk of implicating as criminals the innocent persons not charged under these sections is low. As the criminal law functions and is designed to protect the interests of society, the risk of using such laws in a criminal justice system by convicting the innocent is also high. Thus the existence of such laws is an act of the state which is non-discriminatory, unjust, irrational and an instrument of social control. The central government has also banned Section 228(2) and Section 242 as there is an enormous negative impact of enforcing these sections. Thus, the amendments made to these sections are the very necessary changes and require strengthening the central government's authority. Killing of Tunda at Kanniyakumari, Ammaiyar, May 22, 2007. This was a murder in the recent past by the Kerala government and the government argued that the victim was killed on the basis of having gathered information from Sivakkumaran Nair, a former minister of Kerala and that he was killed for his political stance. This was a murder. The victim was a person whose life was taken at the behest of a government. The motive was never heard. This case should be and will be considered as murder. No political or religious factor should ever be allowed to be used for the purpose of attacking or executing persons. This is the crux of the issue and why the amendments are necessary. The amendments should be to remove the notion of faith and religion and only law shall be the basis of justifiable violence. Reasons for the Amendments The rationale behind the amendments to Section 228(2) and Section 242 is a correct one. The central government has itself amended the laws to remove references to faith and religion. The process of changing these sections was initiated by the central government. Let us see how this was done. The first step taken was the amendment of the “R.B.I Act, 1935” (now R.B.I Act, 1860) by making it a part of Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 in 1973, and the law of procedure has been clarified in the 18th Criminal Procedure Code. The next step was to make the changes to the sections that referred to the laws in Section 228(2) and Section 242 in Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 by again amending the laws in 1973. This was done. The 3rd step was to make the 82157476af
